

To whom it may concern:

It has been brought to my attention that the FCC is considering expanding service of Low Power FM stations. My understanding is that these new stations would take priority over the current FM translator service, thus allowing current stations to be bumped off the air. I would appreciate you reconsidering this action. The station I listen to is K-LOVE and it's the only Christian music radio station available. Without it, I would not have any music to listen to. K-LOVE provides a positive and encouraging station for the entire community. It provides support for those who are hurting or going through difficult situations. Anyone can pick up a phone and contact them for prayer and support. They have counseled suicidal people and kept them from ending their lives. How many other stations focus on helping others? Without K-LOVE, every community they service will suffer. It's not only the music that is uplifting. The radio personalities care about their listeners and try to help them through their day. It would be terrible for our city if the FCC allowed Low Power FM stations to take priority over the current FM translator stations. Please reconsider this action and keep the current stations open. Thank you for your time!
